The Fashion in Jewels.

PEARLS, which seem to be the emblem of youth, are in great demand at present. Their price is high, but not so high as rubies, diamonds and sapphires. The perfectly round pearls, very seldom found, are the choicest to be had. We saw a necklace the other day containing one hundred and forty-six, so exactly alike in shape and color that a connoisseur could detect no difference. It was a remarkabie collection, probably the most remarkable in this country. The fashion in pearl necklaces is to have them strung like beads on a silk thread, and closed by a clasp behind. This is a foolish fancy, as it involves the piercing of the jewels, masses them so that much of their beauty is lost, and renders them a little less safe than when set in metal, since the breaking of the thread in a crowded room would scatter them past recovery. Pear-shaped pearls, though very graceful, are really imperfect in form, and not much used, therefore, except as drops to brooches composed of the round pearls.

Already turquoises, so desired last winter, have dropped out of favor, and it is not to be wondered at. Only the rage for undecided tints could ever have made them popular, and as that is waning, the liking for them wanes also. Their mixed green blue is becoming to nobedy, and their intrinsic worth not being great, they will doubtless be cast aside next season. Coral in all its lovely shades is no longer the mode, and charming sets at cost prices languish unsold in their velvet cases. Coral, though not a precious stone, is one of the prettiest and most useful of ornaments, since it can be appropriately worn both on ordinary and fulldress occasions. Plain gold ornaments are passing out of fashion, not so much because they are no longer pretty, as because they have been so successfully imitated in base metals that people are atraid of being suspected of wearing French git. The handsome gold sets are so expensive that we think it better and cheaper is the end to spend a little more money, and buy a set of coral or jewels which cannot be imitated, and of which one is so much less likely to grow

The setting of jewels this year is in the lightest possible framework of gold-called, we believe, the kuife-blade style-and a distinct feature is the separating of the jewels from each other so that the light may strike through from every side. This is far more beautiful and artistic than the old form of clusters, and is destined to high favor. The Marquise, or long oval, is the shape most in vogue for rings as well as pins, earrings, and lockets, and it is particularly becoming. Bracelets are no longer cheaper than is produced, all things commerce golden shackles, but are inch and half-inch within the limits of the United States. bands in all mapper of designs. Chain and link bracelets, once the most admired, are not now much word. It is not perhaps well known that the best gold work of all kinds is made in this county; and that no foreign production compares favorably with it. Much of the finest jewel setting is done here, and when our country is more fully developed, and the gems, which there is every reason to suppose exist in us richest mineral regions, are brought to market, the Republic will be the center of this extensive and valuable trade. - Scribner's for

Mount Shasta.

In the northern part of California, unfrequented by the ubiquitous tourist, and as yet scarcely touched by the pen of the versatile Boscarcely touched by the pen of the versatile Bohemian, lies a region, which, in the grandeur and variety of its mountain scenery, is suggestive of the marvelous glacial districts of the Alps. Mont Blanc, the Jungfrau and the Matternorn were all unconsciously suggested to me as I caught a full view of the rugged snowy peaks of Shasta, standing like a sentinel at the gate of the rich Sacramento valley. Differing radically from the Yosemite in the character of its landscapes, it has everything to gain and little to lose by the comparison. Around its base, magnificently watered and wooded, lies one of the finest hunting and pasture grounds of the Continent; while rising up to a height of 14,443 feet is one of the most remarkable regions of volcanic desolation now in existence. The brilliant hues of the trees near the base made a sort of wild mosaic of the forest before us, the colors changing, successively to a somber gray, a dull earthy hue, and a fleecy white as the eye sought the top, at which it seemed to me that I should never grow weary of gazing. But a nudge and a word from the driver assured us that the great lumbering stage on which we were seated was approaching "Sisson's!" This is a station on the Califorma and Oregon stage-road, 255 miles north of Sacramento, 75 miles of which distance we had just staged from Redding, on the California and Oregon branch of the Central Pacific Railway. It has an elevation of 3,500 feet above sea level, and is our point of departure for the mountain. Sisson provides horses, blankets, provisions, and a guide -the last not the least essential, for it is over eighteen miles to that coveted summit, and half of that must be traversed on foot, along tortuous and rugged paths. Many a time before I was done the ascent, I thought of Goethe swords:-"Heights charm us; the steps that lead to them do not."

The ride towards the top of the mountain of the year. The leaves of the aspen, willow, mountain mahogany and balm of Gilcad have the summer, and it has been succeeded by a DENTAL SURGEO rich delicate orange, a blended green and yellow, or an apple-red. These exquisite hues, mingled with the heather green of the pines, the bright glazed green of the cedar, and the green tinted white of the silver firs, give an attractive variety and a beautiful contrast of colors rarely seen elsewhere. The aspen leaves especially, tinted with golden and orange, and sensitive to the slightest breath of wind, seen like myraids of gaudy butterfles fluttering in the sunlight. The limbs of the aspen are smooth and glistening and of a delicate grayish white, beautifully complementing the dark, laminated bark of the surrounding coniferous giants; -one suggesting feminine beauty, grace and timidity; the other, masculine strength, and the settled harshness of feature which comes of

We claim superiority for the Hominy made upon our Patent Mills for the following reasons: First. It is made from dry corn without having to go through the soaking process necessary in the old way of making hominy, for the purpose of removing the husks, which causes it to begin to spoil from the moment it is thus made. Whereas our process puts it in a drier condition than corn ever is naturally. Secondly. The same bulk of our Hominy will produce fifty per cent more of the cooked article than by the wet process, as ours swells while cooking, while the other swells while soaking, before being cooked. Thirdly. It takes half the time to cook. Fourthly. It can be shipped with safety from spoiling to any climate, making a cheap substitute for rice and beans. The above also applies to our Pearl Corn Grits. The best proof of the superiority of Hominy and Grits made upon our Patent Mills is that they have been adopted by the Army and Navy of the United States, and approved by all who have used them.

Navy of the United State
